Interesting Point of Law.

DANVILLE, Va., November 26.—An interesting and important point of law was argued in the United States court to-day. The United States attorney filed an "information" against several persons charged with violating the Federal election laws, and intended to try them before a petit jury on this information, without giving indictment by the grand jury. Counsel for the defense claimed it was unconstitutional to try any person for capital or infamous offenses on indictment by the grand jury. The district attorney held that the charges against these men were not infamous crimes in the eye of the law, and hence could be tried simply upon his information. Judge Paul received his decision, saying, "that the question was one of grave importance to be disposed of hastily."
